Train as a Modern Languages Teacher at Bolton School

September 2018

Bolton School is seeking to recruit good language graduates, including those looking to change career, to train as secondary school linguists. The year-long training takes place both at Bolton School and in Bolton state schools. The School's MFL department is highly experienced with some 15 linguists working closely to enthuse pupils, achieve excellent academic results and in many cases prepare them for a languages degree.

Successful applicants are eligible for the £25,000 or £27,500 grants through the Department for Education.

Bolton School is the northern Hub for the National Modern Languages School Centred Initial Teacher Training (SCITT).

Further details are available by contacting Philip Britton (pjb@boltonschool.org) or Sue Hincks (shincks@boltonschool.org)

Bolton School is committed to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children and to equality and diversity in all aspects of employment. The successful candidate will be required to undertake an Enhanced Criminal Records Check for Regulated Activity.
