Train as a Modern Languages Teacher at Bolton School

September 2019

Bolton School is seeking highly qualified graduates to train as secondary school modern foreign languages teachers from September 2019 as part of the School Centred Initial Teacher Training (SCITT). Trainees, whether recent graduates or professionals looking to change career, will benefit from belonging to Bolton School's highly experienced Modern Foreign Languages department in which first-rate linguists across both Divisions work closely to enthuse pupils, achieve excellent academic results and prepare older boys and girls for Higher Education. The year-long course offers placements at local independent and state schools to ensure that trainees are fully prepared to take up rewarding positions in a wide variety of schools.

Successful applicants are eligible for the £26,000 or £28,000 grants through the Department for Education.

To find out more, please contact Marcia Teichman (mteichman@boltonschool.org) or Roger McMinn (rm@boltonschool.org) to apply for the next 'Train to Teach' Taster Day on Tuesday 19 March from 10.30 until 1.30, or to receive further information.

Bolton School is the northern Hub for the National Modern Languages School Centred Initial Teacher Training (SCITT).

Bolton School is committed to safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children and to equality and diversity in all aspects of employment. The successful candidate will be required to undertake an Enhanced Criminal Records Check for Regulated Activity.
